

The Military Strategic Objects of the French Republic in the European Security System Improvement in the 21st Century

Fregan Beatrix

The objective of my thesis is to study the position and role of the French Republic in the formation of the European Security Policy from the period of time following World War II up to now. In the course of my work I devote high priority on the analysis and evaluation of Charles De Gaulle's era as well as his activities. I also observe the role of France within Nato as well as the maintenance of the European Security in the field of politics.

In due course of writing up the special literature my intention is to introduce those strategic grades and functions of the French Republic during the first decade of the 21st century. By evaluating this era it is supposed to point out how important tasks France performs in the course of the European Security. The importance of the foreign policy in France is also to be proved in the formation of the European policy from the period of time following World War II. The role of France is also evaluated in the course of that historical process concerning the maintenance of security policy as high priority.

In addition finding and processing foreign sources is considered to be significant in this thesis including researches in France. It is also essential to support the efforts in creating and maintaining the conditions of the European Security and peace France made by documents.
